Some of the primary characteristics of autocratic leadership include:

- Allows little or no input from group members
- Requires leaders to make almost all of the decisions
- Provides leaders with the ability to dictate work methods and processes
- Leaves group feeling like they aren't trusted with decisions or important tasks
- Tends to create highly structured and very rigid environments
- Discourages creativity and out-of-the box thinking
- Establishes rules and tends to be clearly outlined and communicated

His driving style:

Autocratic Leadership Style / Authoritarian / Commanding

I chose this method because:

- Allows for quick decision-making especially in stress-filled situations
- Offers a clear chain of command or oversight
- Works well where strong, directive leadership is needed

Why did I choose Turki Al-Sheikh:

Fighting corruption and recovering billions in order to store the state

Personal style of leadership: Coaching

- Basically, in this type of leadership, a coaching leader is a great mentor and a pioneer with a good presence in coaching and train
- Followers are helped to improve their skills

The autocratic style tends to sound quite negative. It certainly can be when overused or applied to the wrong groups or situations. However, autocratic leadership can be beneficial in some instances, such as when decisions need to be made quickly without consulting with a large group of people.

Some projects require strong leadership to get things accomplished quickly and efficiently. When the leader is the most knowledgeable person in the group, the autocratic style can lead to fast and effective decisions.

Autocratic leadership can be effective in small groups where leadership is lacking. Have you ever worked with a group of students or co-workers on a project that got derailed by poor organization, a lack of leadership and an inability to set deadlines?

If so, the chances are that your grade or job performance suffered as a result. In such situations, a strong leader who utilizes an autocratic style can take charge of the group, assign tasks to different members, and establish solid deadlines for projects to be finished.

These types of group projects tend to work better when one person is either assigned the role of leader or simply takes on the job on their own. By setting clear roles, assigning tasks, and establishing deadlines, the group is more likely to finish the project on time and with everyone providing equal contributions.
