Project communication management is a collection of processes that help make sure the right messages are sent, received, and understood by the right people.

In our Scenario I will brief the role of each of plan, manage and control project communication plan, including the purpose or goals of the communication plan, the types of information that needed to be shared with stakeholder and customer and the frequency would like to receive information.

To manage and control, the process of the Managing communications involves collecting, creating, distributing, storing, retrieving and managing project information.

The project manager needs to control the flow of communication and the information shared in the communication. About 85-90% of the project managers time is spent in communicating. Meetings: There are several rules for meetings. Recurring meetings should be scheduled in advance. Meeting with the team should be regular (however, need not be often). Each meeting should have a specific purpose and agenda.

Moreover, the EEF, OPA and PMIS play the big role of achieving the purpose for example to link the ministry of health with patient that to deliver the right file to the right person within short time.
