Jack Ma's Leadership Style

Jack Ma was born on 15 October 1964 in Hangzhou in south China. He learned how to use the internet in 1998, one year before starting his online business after the convention of seventeen of his friends to invest. I chose him as a leader because he is a very successful and effective business leader, where Jack Ma founded Alibaba Group in 1999, and today he the richest man in China.

Jack Ma's had a democratic leadership style. He was characterized by extroversion, where he inspired many with his energy and optimism. He has high conscientiousness in his job. He behavior was relation-oriented a participative leader were had high integrity he respects the confidence of his subordinate.

He was democratic, open-minded, and creative. He was agreeable by being responsive and never disappointing anyone, and flexible and friendly with his employees because he was highly confident about them. He was a participative leader who used to get his employees involved in the decision-making and take their opinions into consideration. He used to meet with every new employee in the organization, and always make staff meeting and he made a BBS intranet system to be able to communicate with his staff by allowing them to share their thoughts and interact with them casually, but he had over self-confidence on his ability to change the world so he was a little bit unrealistic.

I have assertive leadership (ENTJ-A). I am extraverted, judging, and assertive my role is analyst, and my strategy is people mastery. I always seek to achieve my goals through my strong resolve and helping all people around me. I dislike competing with others, but I compete with myself to be better day by day. In addition, I have a high ability to express emotions, recognize the talents of others, and motivate them, and this is what I done in my work teams.
