The Plan also prepares teams to identify obstacles during the project, and helps them to understand the project's costs, scope and time frame.

"Communication refers to the process through which information between two or more individuals is transmitted and understood". Communication is an integral part of the organizational process as communication has an impact on the efficiency, decisions and morality of the organizations up and down the organizational hierarchy. Effective communication is thus considered today as the foundation of companies (Von Krogh et al., 2000). Communication strategies are common in the business world, where they are used as part of a corporate plan to describe how people can communicate. One company may have several strategies for various categories of people, such as customers, investors, competitors and employees. Some companies have an internal communication strategy in order to communicate within the company. These strategies are used to determine what information is to be shared with customers or investors and how this information is to be provided. (Kang, M., et.al, 2017)

Literature review:

By definition, a strategy is the starting point for business conduct. It outlines the ambitions of an organization, outlines its selected direction and describes the main initiatives and projects required to achieve its mission. Communication strategies are common in the business world, where they are used as part of a corporate plan to describe how people can communicate. A single business can have a number of strategies, including customers, investors, competitors or employees for different categories of people.

High performance communication strategies, systems and practices play a key role. The lifeblood of the organizational body is information, understanding and knowledge. A comprehensive and thoughtful communication strategy is an important element for successful changes and improvements.

The communication strategy is designed as a functional strategy that gives the communication function focus and direction. It is supported by a practitioner who plays the functional organizational role of communications manager. Senior communication practitioners and managers make strategic decisions on management and communication with strategic stakeholders as a result of a strategic thought process.

Strategic communication is a clear, concise and persuasive process for presenting ideas. A director should deliberately endeavor to master and use the communication skills strategically, that is, in line with the values, mission and strategy of the organization. (Bucăța, G., et.al, 2017)

Communication is an integral part of any approach to improving performance. Organizations that aim to achieve strategic objectives set well-defined strategies for communication. A well-defined approach involves employees and is in line with the business goals of the organization.

The organizational performance, according to Richard et al. (2009), encompasses three areas of firm outcomes: financial performance (profit, return on assets, return on investment); product performance (sales, market share) and return on the shareholder (total shareholder return, economic value added).

Ricardo (2001) submitted that performance actions can include performance management and leadership development measures that include the required skills and attitudes in building performance management based behavior criteria and relative normative measures, educational and training concepts and instruments. The term 'performance,' which includes effectiveness, performance, economy, quality, consistency and policy actions, should therefore be more broadly based on the above literature review.

According to Wood (2003), "three or more people have to rely on each other over time, follow common rules of conduct to achieve a common goal" Gerald Wilson defines a group as "a collection of three or more people who interact with each other on some common problem or interdependent aim and can influence each other."

Methodology:

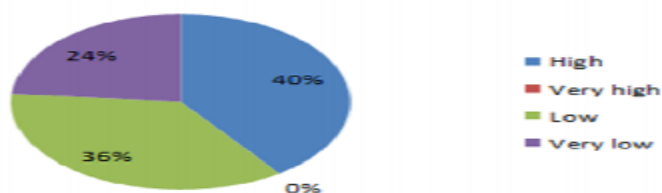

This element gives an overview of the methodology used in the study. The study examined the impacts on organizational performance in Kenya Ports Authority of communication strategies. This study has employed descriptive research design. The following figure shows the effects of group work on corporate performance

The analyzed data clearly show that the group effort greatly improves the organizational performance at KPA. Group work allows employees to work together for the common good by communicating details of their work to each other in order for their work to be efficient and effective.

 Results and Discussion:

Both theoretical and practical, the findings of these research should be important. Communication strategies are common in the business world, where they are used to inform different groups of people. The communication strategies are used as part of a business plan. A single firm can have several strategies for various categories of people such as customers, investors, competitors or staff. Some companies have an internal communication strategy in order to communicate within the company. These strategies are used to determine what information is to be shared with customers or investors and how this information is to be provided.

The research found that the communication strategies should be applied in order for any organizational performance to be effective;

1. Open- An open environment for communication allows all members of the organization, at all levels, to share feedback, thoughts and critics.

2. This also includes explicit steps to ensure that all employees feel engaged in decisions affecting their daily work. Secret communications organizations can shut off people, which can hamper their participation and lead to lost thoughts and opportunities. The involvement of employees is a key to the satisfaction and success of employees.
3. Double-way communication from top to bottom shouldn't be one-way. There are two-way communications, or discussions, among members of the organizations, which involve effective communication strategies.
4. Business communication results should be driven by results and strategically focused on achieving measurable results. Organizations must consider what employees should know in order to effectively perform their work, to interact with customers and to serve as ambassadors outside the company.
