Definition of Financial system

Financial system is a system that facilitates the movement of capital in the form of individuals and institutions within the economy through providing various financial means and mechanisms for exchanging money, such as investors, lenders, and debtors.

Financial system elements

- Financial institutions
- Financial Markets
- Financial Instruments

- These elements work together to facilitate the transfer of capital in the various components of the financial system, the financial system exists at the local, regional and state levels, and the financial system plays an effective role in the process of economic development by connecting savers with investors, which contributes to the creation and maximization of capital gains.
- The money system provides tools to transfer money from savers who have idle money and redistribute them effectively to investors who are able to create investments and achieve profits.

Risk

There is always a risk incorporated in every investment like shares or debentures. The two major components of risk systematic risk and unsystematic risk, which when combined results in total risk. The systematic risk is a result of external and uncontrollable variables, which are not industry or security specific and affects the entire market leading to the fluctuation in prices of all the securities.

On the other hand, unsystematic risk refers to the risk which emerges out of controlled and known variables, that are industry or security specific.

Systematic risk cannot be eliminated by diversification of portfolio, whereas the diversification proves helpful in avoiding unsystematic risk. Take a full read of this article to know about the differences between systematic and unsystematic risk.

Portfolio Diversification

Most people have heard the old saying, "Don't put all your eggs in one basket."

Diversification is a risk management strategy that mixes a wide variety of investments within a portfolio. A diversified portfolio contains a mix of distinct asset types and investment vehicles in an attempt at limiting exposure to any single asset or risk.

The rationale behind this technique is that a portfolio constructed of different kinds of assets will, on average, yield higher long-term returns and lower the risk of any individual holding or security.
