PROJECT LEADERSHIP

As an experience worker who has more than 12 years of job works. Meeting difficult leader styles may happen. This article will express an authoritarian leadership style and why I choose it, then dose it effect on my career history. Secondly, what is its traits and style of this type of leader and why do I choose this typically style. Thirdly, describing this leadership style by an example that provides all the situation of it. Finally, what leadership style do I prefer for myself.

In the past I have met a manager who considers as a commanding leader who influenced me in a bad condition, which reflected directly to my health situation. Every morning when I usually take my medicine I flashback him and that particularly job. Despite the good salary of that career I lastly chosen to take a difficult decision and applied for resignation.

The authoritarian leadership style is a difficult leader to deal with. I have met this leader in my third job and I remember how he ineffectively influenced on me and my health in general. He was such a limited participated with his team, additionally putting them on hard stress of different situations all the time. He usually used a classic leadership structure which may not be very suitable in these modern days.

The autocratic leader has many drawback characteristics which directly influence his team members either in a positive or negative ways. In my opinion this style cannot match me right, due to its dreadful impact to the all members, which leads to provide poor confidence and bad atmosphere of workplace. For example, one day he commanded his team members to complete some tasks in one day, which ridiculously impossible to be achieved. Then he strongly asks to finish it in any way which putting the team under high pressure without giving them any positive supports. So the task has been done in a bad shape and the team was depressed moreover, no one obtains any credits for that horrible job.

I prefer “coaching leadership style” which effected on me by inspiring, teaching, motivating and supervising to achieve highly performance in my career and developing my skills.
