Advanced Project Management

Books and Beyond

Introduction:

Due to the unexpected emergence of COVID-19, everything is shifting to the online world, including studies. Online learning is flourishing, and educational institutes are adopting more remote learning strategies. With the growing demand for online education, many students are unable to get school supplies like books, stationary items, and printing services because of the current circumstances. With that being in mind, my family and I came up with an idea for an application called “Books and Beyond”. The main objective of designing this application is to facilitate ordering new books, secondhand books, and stationary items, as well as provide printing and photocopying services for students at their doorsteps without the need to go out of their houses during a global pandemic. In addition, the main purpose of this application is to encourage students who cannot afford to purchase or buy new books to get second-hand books at discounted or lower prices. The scope of this project is that it will benefit stationary item suppliers, printing press, and photocopiers to earn by providing services to students. Furthermore, the application allows students to sell books at lower prices to be purchased by other students.

I was assigned as a project manager to supervise the project and ensure effective communication within the team during project development. My main task as project manager is to assign roles and responsibilities to every member in the group and maintain good communication among them. It's the project manager's task to take feedback from group members and effectively communicate their suggestions to other group mates. Furthermore, my responsibilities include handling and resolving conflicting situations that may hurdle the project's success. The project, which we have been working on for 4 months now, is still at the execution stage and is expected to be launched in the third quarter of 2021.

Literature review:

Effective communication is considered key to the success of any project. Many studies showed how effective communication and leadership made the project successful. Moreover, it is observed that effective communication and listening effectively to your groupmates produce high team satisfaction and success scores. (Adu-Oppong, 2014) stated that effective communication is the method of exchanging knowledge and shared understanding from one individual or group to other. Workplace communication is essential for building and sustaining quality working relationships in organizations. Many effective communication strategies are used by different organizations and project managers to achieve success. Since our project is to provide services to students and suppliers, it is my responsibility as the project leader to adopt effective communication strategies for the successful development and deployment of the project. Therefore, we will review some communication strategies that I will adapt to provide a more constructive working environment to my fellow mates.

1. Listening

Listening is the most effective coping technique that does not include chatting or talking. Having a productive conversation is necessary to understand others' ideas and concerns. Active listening promotes authenticity, transparency, and enhances performance. When you pay attention to your talking partner, you reassure them that they are being understood, which builds confidence and makes them feel like their thoughts are important to you (Rizescu, 2017).

2. Creating an open and receptive environment

Effective communication, like effective listening, is dependent on the existence of a receptive and open environment. Group members at the workplace or working on any project would be unable to voice their complaints if they believe they would be swept under the rug and ignored. Developing a calm and approachable mood for your communication will make members feel at ease and hence, they will work more actively and happily (Perryer, 2018).

3. Providing opportunities for formal and informal feedback

In this study, (Zakaria, 2012) highlighted that encouraging formal or informal feedback demonstrates that you welcome and listen to members' opinions. Thanking the interacting person for their time after each conversation shows a sign of kindness, and it indicates that you appreciate their presence when they should have been working on something else. Moreover, it's important to allow and give time to listeners to give their opinions and suggestions, not just on how the dialogue went, but also on how you provided content. Accept feedback and use it to improve the structure of the forthcoming missives.

4. Utilize multiple modes of communication

Everyone has their preferences. Similarly, some individuals prefer to have face-to-face communication, while others believe that text messages are more appropriate for conveying information. However, to communicate effectively with others in your team, you must become acquainted with various means of communication. By using various channels of contact with your colleagues, you will move one step closer to becoming a communication expert (Kashyap, 2021).

5. Spend some time in training

This study stated that training is sometimes overlooked, particularly when it comes to anything as simple as communication. Nevertheless, familiarizing the staff with the concept of diverse speaking types will make you work more efficiently together. This may include some collaborative activities or several team-building lessons. Provide your team with real-life examples to see how they handle and work out these situations. Crisis management and conflict resolutions are effective strategies to have better collaboration in the team but the more you will teach and train your staff to work together in difficult environments, the more they can interact (Ilieva, 2017).

Methodology:

The research for the design and development of this project was done using reliable resources from the internet. As a project manager, I tested the requirements using reliable data from Google and the Internet. The investigation for effective communication strategies was carried out using e-resources from a readily available website. Moreover, journal papers from Research Gate, Google Scholar, and Sage Publications were used to gather data, and books from Academia were studied to get knowledge. The investigation is done keeping in mind the needs of students, suppliers, and my role as a project manager to provide and maintain an effective communication environment within the group during the project development.

Results and Discussion:

After reviewing past literature, I have found that effective communication is important in project success. Additionally, although it's hard to get everyone to agree on the same thing, an excellent project manager can do this through effective communication strategies. Furthermore, studies revealed that if a project manager uses conflict management and resolution strategies, he or she could achieve more success and have a constructive work environment during project development.

According to the findings, recognizing the real issues within the group and being in contact with all team members are all essential components of successful project management communication. During all the good and bad days, it is important to be active, visible, and engaging with others as it is the responsibility of the project manager. Besides, effective communication strategies proved to be beneficial and efficient for project development. Those strategies help maintain a friendly working environment. Moreover, communicating well and listening as well as giving value to team feedback and opinions provide a higher satisfaction rate among groupmates. They work with more enthusiasm and thus, provide high success scores.
