Successfully managing a project from start to finish requires certain key skills. Scheduling, time management, and the ability to negotiate with internal and external parties are all critical competencies. Leadership, risk management, and critical thinking similarly all fall high on the list. However, the skill that is most important to project management is communication.

As a manager I will implement a communication strategy that helps all members to work in ease and harmony. Work on internal and external communication at the same time, communicate formally and informally in other times, and share and discuss all opinions of the members. Keeping processes documented, make use of technology, keep cultural and language barriers in mind and understand who should get what information and how.

Finally, I believe that project managers who understand how to send the right amount of information to the right people at the right time will be able to keep things moving smoothly, resulting in a successful project.
