The article by Akyeşilmen (2018) titled "Cyber Good Governance: A New Challenge in International Power Politics?" is referenced in the reviewed paper to support the idea that cyberspace lacks strong, institutional global governance structures.

It highlights that mechanisms such as international law and diplomacy, which traditionally reduce global anarchy, are underdeveloped or absent in cyberspace.

The reference by Al-Tahat & Moneim (2020) is used in the article to illustrate a regional, practical application of cyber governance, specifically in the context of Jordanian commercial banks.

It supports the broader argument that cyber governance is increasingly influenced by emerging technologies—especially artificial intelligence (AI)—and demonstrates how AI impacts governance accuracy and efficiency in financial institutions.
