John F. Kennedy

John F. Kennedy was the 35th president of the United States of America. He served as president in the years between 1961 and 1963. He was one of the most influential and famous political leaders in the world. Although he was characterized as an authoritarian leader who was assassinated, he was one of the most successful presidents of the united states.

In the short time he was a president, John F. Kennedy achieved what most people would not dream to accomplish in a lifetime. He was known for his strong opinions and views and great determination to reach his goals. He was successful in rallying the entire nation to devote resources to sending a man to the moon and get him back safely. Even though the moon landing was accomplished six years after John F. Kennedy assassination, he is considered the main contributor to this accomplishment. These traits are the reason why most people consider John F. Kennedy to be an authoritarian leader.

In 1962, the united states and the entire world witnessed the Cuban missile crisis. Russia deployed nuclear missiles on Cuban land to help the regime of Fidel Castro against the united states of America. As soon as this was discovered during an air reconnaissance mission, John F. Kennedy enforced a quarantine on Cuban bound offensive weapons. This resulted in Russian backing down and removing their nuclear missiles from Cuba. This fast decision with quick positive results is a clear feature of an authoritarian leader.

My personal leadership style is closest to the democratic leadership style. I mostly lean towards setting work parameters and involving the entire team members in the whole process. However, I reserve the right to the final say on major decisions. My leadership style aids the trust building between my subordinates. On the other hand, in stressful conditions, my leadership style can slow me down and affect how I handle the situation.
