

Manufacturing facilities in Aramco are exposed to a number of operational risks, including reduced production capacity utilization rates due to scheduled activities such as maintenance or closures, and unplanned outages that may occur - for example - as a result of equipment failure or human error, and failure to Availability of skilled labor; Lower than expected cost recovery rates, the company's contractor performance rate, civil strikes and unrest, corrosion issues affecting factories and pipelines, health and safety accidents that may occur due to outside contractors, and exposure to natural disasters such as volatile weather conditions. Any such incident would negatively affect Aramco's business, its operational results, or its financial position

Aramco companies must comply with all environmental, health, safety and security related laws and regulations applicable to their operations. These systems set various standards that govern different aspects of the environment, health, safety and security. In addition, there are some special provisions that may be applied in .some areas of operation that have an environmental impact

Accidents related to Aramco products may involve serious damage to property, the environment or human health, which may negatively and fundamentally affect the company's business. The work of (Aramco) inherently involves the risk of hazardous substances being seeped into the environment, discharged, or any other forms of emissions of hazardous substances occurring. (Aramco) uses raw materials and manufactures, stores, and transfers volatile and explosive chemical products, which may negatively affect the environment, and its operations contain the following -- environmental risks

- Explosions / Fires in Production or Logistics Facilities
- Discharge of toxic gases into the atmosphere
- Discharging hazardous chemicals on land or in waterways

Aramco has a plan to determine the type of risks and how to avoid them before they occur and write daily repo