- Meet with the team periodically

To hold periodic meetings with the working team if it is a small team (a few people) or at least with the department managers. If the number is large, the meeting should be periodic (weekly, bi-monthly or monthly). The goal of the meeting is to use brainstorming and speaking loudly to reach innovative solutions to achieve the set goals, discuss the problems facing the working members and search for solutions to them, as well as the roles and tasks required of each person are distributed.

- Effective communication with everyone
- Task management and directing

From the moment the project started, there is a goal that the work team seeks to accomplish, and of course the big goal will be divided into smaller goals, and each small goal is divided into a number of other smaller goals, so that the completion of each goal is made up of a group of small tasks.

- Conflict management and resolution

Disagreements may arise between team members, and the smart manager should cleverly direct these disputes so that no one is hurt or turns instead of serving the project's goals to defending himself and his views in front of those who disagree.

- Motivation and active participation

Among the qualities of a successful manager is that he motivates the work team on the one hand and encourages them to participate in the development of the project and present their innovative ideas that contribute to the success of the project on the other hand, as well as reward the hardworking and punish the inactive.
